Dear Sir/Madam

I am a person who was brought up on a dairy farm. Fresh whole milk is most nutritious and there is absolutely nothing wrong with the supply and sale of whole fresh milk as a product which enhances the people who drink it.

If there may be a "down side" I have not experienced it. If milk were to be produced in an unhealthy environment then the justification may be there. Nevertheless there may be a day coming when YOU need the nourishment that whole milk can give. Do you think it right that freedom of choice be bludgeoned to death in this manner as making it totally illegal to sell milk that has all the goodness that nature can provide.

I strongly support the right of the individual to CHOICE. One major problem with society today is the processing of food till the nourishment has been driven out of it. For everybodies sake in Australia and NZ do not allow this decision to pass.

Regards
