Re: Food derived from enhanced yield & herbicide-tolerant corn line DP202216

I would like to respond to the application made by Dow AgroSciences Australia Pty Ltd to permit the use of corn (maize) line DP202216 as a new food produced using gene technology.

I have read the information provided by DOW on the Food Standards Australia New Zealand website.

I admit I have no scientific training to assess the risk assessment, and I acknowledge that other GM-modified ingredients are already common in Australian food manufacturing.

What I am concerned about, though, is transparency for consumers.

Products produced in Australia - or imported and sold in Australia - that include genetically modified components should be clearly labelled as such.

So, I submit ... approve the application, but ensure the end products are clearly marked so consumers have a choice.

And please extend this requirement to all products that include other GM-modified ingredients.
